they were a surprise to our soldiers, who thought that in breaking camp they had looked their last on any women of their own country. Many a man whose thoughts were fixed on the mother, wife or swectheart back home saw in the blue clad canteen worker the very woman he was thinking of. Thousands of them were so young, and they were beginning a fourney which was to bring them face to face with death in a foreign land. A curious nexthological change was apparent in them, as, after months of training, they found themselves at last confronting the unknown. Their eyes told the story. Every woman felt the sacredness of the moment and took away with her an indefinable impulse that must make impossible for the future any petty outlook on life.

Over in France many of those soldiers went under in the fighting that began at Château Thierry and ended when the enemy sued for peace. So overwhelming were the casualties when the enemy sued for peace. So overwhelming were the casualties that at one time great numbers had to be sent to French hospitals, where no American nurses or doctors were stationed. It was impossible for nurses and patients to understand each other, and General Pershing asked the Paris office of the American Red Cross to help solve the problem. Miss Ruth Morgan, the present president of the Colony Club and at that time, head of the Woman's Overseas Division, organized "fixing squadrons" of nurses and nurses' aids, who were sent to every hospital where American were she constantly under shell fire. When our boys came out from the ether or awoke from their first uncasy slumber they found an American nurse within call. These nurses could not remain constantly—there were too many other soldiers to be visited—but at least once every day our wounded men were able to get in touch with an American woman.

The material production of our womcovered the entire war zone, travelling all night, if necessary, and over roads constantly under shell fire. These nurses could not remain constantly—there were too many other solders to be visited—but at least once every day our wounded men were able to get in touch with an American woman.

Loyal Workers at Home

The material production of our women, exemplified by the thousands of pajamas, the millions of knitted articles and the more than half a billion bandages and surgical dressings made by willing workers, was one of the things expected. Women have always been the producers along such lines. But the soldierly manner in which all this was accomplished was a continual surprise and delight. Aladdin's lamp wrought no greater miracles than our women. The frequent and perplexing changes in patterns and measurements developments in war surgery, did not dismay, but only seemed to spur them

Col. Burkham Says

French claims for damages arising from the operations of American troops amounted to about $1 for every man in the expeditionary forces, according to Lieut. Col. Robert E. Burkham, of St. Louis, chief of the renting, requisition and claims bureau of the A. E. F., who has just returned after twenty-two months' service overseas. Colonel Burkham took occasion vigorously to deny the repeated report that the French charged the Americans rental for the ground used as trenches on the fighting lines.

"Fifty thousand claims were handled," he said. "There were, for example, an average of three hundred cases of personal injuries monthly in Paris alone, and nine officers were constantly engaged settling these."

One of the largest claims, amount-ing to 3,000,000 frances ($600,000), grew out of the destruction of forests at Souge, the American artillery training camp near Bordeaux. This claim, said Colonel Burkham, is now in process of settlement. changes in patterns and measurements developments in war surgery, did not dismay, but only seemed to spur them to greater effort. When a relief snip carrying 4.000 000 bandages to our army in France was torpedoed, Red Cross workers immediately buckled to and produced twice that number of dressings. And so it went with every called for by the surgeons, due to the undertaking.

The accomplishments of these years must not be wasted. I am a strong believer in universal service for women as well as for men. The Red Cross, built up on a foundation of service for humanity, may fittingly become the great medium through which our American women may serve. And, oh, how they want to serve! Their appeals for something worth while to do have been as overwhelming since the signing of the armistice as during our darkest days of war.

The underlying principle of the Red Cross has been emergency service, but we have outgrown this form of organization and the opportunity to develop a working unit of tremendous force and vitality is knocking at our door. Even the most excellent of emergency organizations seldom function properly when emergencies arise unless they are in a constant state of preparedness, and I am eager to have preparedness made the keynote, not alone of our Red Cross, but of the women of our country. It is evident that the great majority of us have become mentally and spiritually alive to our splendid opportunity for service, but we must be unified and so organized practically that we can meet any and every call made on our womanhood by civic, national or international crises.

Met Great Disasters

The Halifax disaster, the Guatemala earthquake, the South Amboy explosion came at a time when we were mobilized for war relief and, in consequence, we were thoroughly prepared to help in the rescue work. Never in the history of the organization had assistance been so instant or so systematic. Mental and physical preparedness made this possible.

While we must continue our foreign service until the very end, we are now privileged to devote a great part of our strength to our own communities and this individual and physical propagation. Met Great Disasters man of the National Bureau of Chapter Activities of the American Red strength to our own communities and their individual problems, and to preparing ourselves for whatever the Looking backward is sometimes necessary in order that a people may move forward with clear thought and high heart. Just now we women of America are busy counting up our mercies, the war were only possible because of the magnificent cohesion and cooperation of the magnificent cohesions and changes.

the war were only possible because of the magnificent cohesion and coöperation of our divisions and chapters.

Now that we have reached the point where our relation, as women, to the Red Cross is no longer measured merely by the knowledge that, in countries just over the sea, women like ourselves have worked and served and suffered to an extent that is far beyond our conception. With new tasks facing us, we see in our recent work and service a symbol for the future. Nothing that we have done shall go to waste; each day's task is woven into a fabric that must form a background for to-morrow and the days after.

The millions of women throughout America who consecrated the last two years to Red Cross work have learned the spiritual meaning of patriotism, and in a day, here greated for them.

Tried by Many Calls

America who consecrated the last two years to Red Cross work have learned the spiritual meaning of patriotism, and in so doing have created for the selves a new form of citizenship.

Patriotism Covered Country

This is true not only of the women in the large cities and towns, but of those of our many scattered villages and farms. Did the spirit of America seem slow to awake? I think not! It was beautiful and wonderful to watch the flame of the spirit spread from community to community, from home to home, to see it follow the putting up of the little service star in the window. It was as though that star, like the star of Bethlehem, pointed window. It was as though that star, like the star of Bethlehem, pointed window. It was as though that star, like the star of Bethlehem, pointed the way, and it was inspirational to feel and to watch the onward march of our women.

Given this marvellous background of work accomplished, of effort sustained under almost insurmountable difficulties, are these millions of workers going to let their hands fall idle and their lives drop back into the former paths of ease? From all parts of the country, from each of our great division centres, comes the message that the women of America want the work of the Red Cross, there was true of every community invaded by the disease. This experience has made the Red Cross chapters sent their aids and nursing assistants to the rescue. This form of service was true of every community invaded by the disease. This form of service was true of every community invaded by the disease. This community invaded by the disease. This community invaded by the disease. This complete the result of the rescue.
